Talks began Friday to try to end the dock dispute and avert a threat of industrial chaos.

A strike vote by the 1,200 dockers at Felixstowe, on the east coast, closed Britain's main port for containerized traffic.

At least 60 cargo ports, including the huge docks at Liverpool, Lon-don, Glasgow and Hull, are paralyzed. The strike was solidifying rapidly as other ports shut down Friday.

A meeting of the port employers and the dockers' leaders on Friday was the second since 35,000 workers were called out in protest over the use of nonunion labor to load iron ore for a steel plant picketed

With railmen, seamen and others rallying to the side of the dockers and, indirectly, to that of the miners, the port owners were under pressure to settle the strike quickly before imports and exports collapse and a general union-government confrontation develops. Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and her cabinet are said to be deeply worried about the role of the industrial unrest in the past week's strong declines in the British pound and in stock prices. In the coal strike, which has all but halted coal production and kept most of Britain's 180,000 miners idle for four months, violence flared again Friday between pickets and the police.

Two policemen were injured and 40 strikers were arrested after a battle on a bridge in Nottinghamshire, in central England, as the police tried to prevent the pickets from reaching a pit where miners were still working.

Ferraro: New Fire for the Campaign Mondale's Choice Is Seen as Bold Stroke, Yet a Gamble

By Howell Raines

New York Times Service SAN FRANCISCO -- Walter F. Mondale's choice of a woman as his running mate is being in-terpreted as a bold attempt to reshape his political image and to fire up what some feared would become a humdrum, almost hopeless challenge to President Ronald Reagan. By proposing Representative peralding A. Ferraro of New York, the first woman to be pro-posed for nomination by a major party, they said Mr. Mondale had acquired a political partner whose background and policies seemed tailor-made for offsetting Mr. Reagan's strengths.

But for a likely presidential nominee whose career has been characterized by cautious weigh-ing of odds, the decision also represented a gamble that the choice would win more votes among younger women than it would lose among middle-aged men. Votes from these two groups are most likely to be swayed, polls indicate.

In the euphoria of the moment, however, Democratic leaders seemed eager to ignore the political dangers courted by

WASHINGTON - The White House has ordered the Pentagon to draw up new contingency plans for U.S. air strikes against guerrilla po-sitions in El Salvador in case of a major leftist offensive this summer. according to Reagan administration officials.

National Security Council officials asked for the plans, the officials said, because of intelligence reports suggesting that an offensive is quite likely and fears that the Salvadoran Army could run short of supplies in dealing with such an

The security council also has asked the State and Defense de-partments to consider what kind of emergency military aid President Ronald Reagan could send to El Salvador if Congress fails next month to approve the administration's pending request for $117 mil-tion, they said.

A source said that the requests were made in a directive issued to the Pentagon, the State Department and the Central Intelligence Agency last week. "It asked for a whole range of military and covert options," the source said, "It spe-cifically included air sorties."

The request for new, more detailed contingency plans does not mean that the administration has decided to order any such military actions, the officials said. But it does reflect increased concern over the possibility of a major reversal for the Salvadoran Army and a desire to have specific options available for U.S. military action

Iran Is Obtaining Arms From 'Neutral' Nations Despite U.S. Pressure

By Herbert H. Denton

WASHINGTON - Britain has taken a position of strict diplomatic neutrality in the war between Iran and Iraq, but this has not stopped it from allowing defense contractors to sell military hardware, including amphibious assault ships, to the Tehran government.

Like several other Western powers supplying Iran, the British have resisted U.S. pressure to cut off these sales, according to American officials. The British argue that they are licensing for sale only "nonlethal" hardware, and place the two ships in this class. The shipbuilders are adding beds and operating rooms and calling them hospital ships, although the vessels are capable of hauling up to nine tanks and have mounts for four 40mm guns. Switzerland's interpretation of its policy of neutrality has not prevented the licensing for private sale of Swiss-manufactured PC-7 turbo-trainer aircraft to both sides in the Gulf war.

If the situation has produced contradictions between diplomatic and arms policies for several Western powers, it has also required pragmatic adjustments to the crusading Moslem fundamentalist dogma of the regime of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

Iran's former ambassador to the United Nations, Mansour Farhang, who now opposes the Tehran government, recently gave his ac-count of how Ayatollah Khomeini reacted when an aide informed him in early 1981 that some of the weapons and ammunition Iran was buying on the European black market originated in Israel. The Stockholm International Peace Research Institute estimates that in the first three years of the war, 18 countries supplied Iraq and 17 supplied Iran, while 10, including the Soviet Union, sold weapons to both sides.

West Germany, Brazil and Italy are among those mentioned as major weapons suppliers to both Iran and Iraq. French sales of jet fighters and missiles to Iraq have given that country clear air superiority.

After Israel invaded Lebanon in 1982, there were rumors that Israel sold Iran some of the weapons it captured from the Palestine Liberation Organization. Suspicions linger, especially among European diplomats, that Israel is still supplying Iran with weapons or aircraft spare parts, although the Israeli government denies it has made any sales in two years.

Describing the delicate U.S. effort to persuade allies to curb the flow of arms to Iran, Richard C. Murphy, assistant secretary of state for Near Eastern and South Asian affairs, told Congress last month that in view of Iran's intransigence Soviet Agreement

U.S., Soviet Near Accord on Hot Line, Are Close to Resuming Other Talks

By Leslie H. Gelb Ven: York Times Service

WASHINGTON — The Soviet Union and the United States are expected to initial an agreement in the next few days to modernize the hot line for crisis communications between the two governments.

Officials said the accord was part of an expanding agenda of nonpolitical talks between the two sides. In coming weeks, the sources said, talks will resume on the Soviet-U.S. boundary in the Bering Sea, on restoring Soviet fishing rights in U.S. waters, and on cultural exchanges. While Soviet diplomats appear to be playing down the discussions as minor and technical, both sides recognize the broader political implications. It is mutually understood that the Reagan administration will use the increased activity to argue that the Soviet leaders will work with it, contrary to Democratic accusations.

The pact for modernizing the 21year-old hot line for crisis communications was scheduled to be initialed by Monday.

Officials said that, in deference to Soviet wishes, the signing would not be portrayed as a breakthrough in relations between the two countries. But the Soviet side has acceded to U.S. wishes to have the docu-ment signed at a higher level than the two delegation heads.

and in the White House. Last year, President Ronald Reagan proposed modernizing the equipment, which can handle only about 60 words a minute. The new equipment allows for almost instantaneous transmission of texts and can transmit graphics.

Technical differences were resolved in Moscow in April, but completion was delayed because of disagreement over who would sign and what kind of announcement would be made. The Soviet Union remains reluctant to give the appearance of establishing a working relationship with the Reagan administration. But the Russians appear to be re-sponding to nonpolitical proposals. Essentially, U.S. officials said, the United States has been trying to revive a number of lesser accords that date from the Nixon administration, but were shelved by President Jimmy Carter after the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan in

In about two weeks, a U.S. delegation will go to Moscow to resume talks on the maritime boundary in the Bering Sea. The boundary dates from 1867, when the United States purchased Alaska from Russia. There have been differences on how to draw the boundary in certain places and the discussions are intended to resolve the issue.

Administration officials said the United States was about to propose restoring the Soviet fishing quota within the United States' 200-mile (320-kilometer) economic zone. Before the intervention in Afghanistan, the Soviet Union was allowed to catch more than 400,000 tons of PANAMA CITY (AP) — Foreign Minister Oyden Ortega Durán of Panama has accused the United States of violating the 1977 Panama Canal treaties by discriminating against local workers. Relations between the two countries could suffer, Mr. Ortega said.

He made the assertion Thursday after the U.S.-controlled Panama Canal Commission voted to extend special privileges, at a cost of $4 million a year, to U.S. employees and operators of the canal.

The treaties, which gives Panama full control of the waterway by the year 2000, stipulate that U.S. workers are to lose all special privileges, including use of the U.S. Army commissary and post office, by October 1984. ## Mexican Troops Accused of Brutality

MEXICO CITY (Combined Dispatches) — Troops have surrounded 5,000 Guatemalan refugees in the southern Mexico jungle and cut them off from food and medicine, a Roman Catbolic priest has reported. He said the refugees were trying to avoid transfer to new government camps. A government spokesman denied that and other charges made by the priest, who requested anonymity. But the diocese of San Cristobal de las Casas made similar charges. The refugees had fled into Mexico over the last two years to escape an anti-guerrilla campaign by the Guatemalan Army. Mexico has started moving them away from the border on grounds that this makes it easier to guard and feed them.

Some published reports said many refugees resisted being moved because it would take them too far from their homeland. The priest said Thursdayat news conference that on July 5, Mexican soldiers tornired three refugees in front of witnesses in the frontier camp known as Ixcan, took the men away in a small plane and dumped their bodies on the landing strip the next day. # Cuba, U.S. Open Talks

By John M. Goshko

WASHINGTON — Cuban and U.S. delegations have begun their first official negotiations since President Ronald Reagan took office in January 1981. The talks conern the eventual return of about 1,000 undesirable refugees to Cuba, as well as other immigration issues, U.S. officials said. The sources said the talks, which gained momentum after the Rev. Jesse L. Jackson visited Cuba last month, began Thursday at an undisclosed location in New York.

Mr. Jackson, a contender for the Democratic presidential nomination, went to Cuba at the end of June and, in his meetings with Mr. Castro, secured the release of 49 Cubans and Americans. The U.S. sources said that the four-member Cuban delegation was headed by Deputy Foreign

The Cubans have said they are willing to discuss return of the so-called Mariel "excludables" only in whether the Reagan administration has agreed to negotiate on the basis proposed by Cuba or whether the two sides still are fencing about how broad the talks should be.

U.S. Skepticism on Pope Plot Fades

CLA Takes Evidence of Bulgarian Link to '81 Shooting More Seriously

By Charles R. Babcock and Bob Woodward Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — Some senior U.S. officials now agree that the Bulgarian secret service aided Mehmet Ali Agea in the attempted assassination of Pope John Paul II in 1981, according to well-placed Senior Central Intelligence Agency officials, including its director, William J. Casey, were once skeptical of the allegations of Bulgarian involvement in the assassination attempt. But they are now said to be impressed by the evidence gathered by Antonio Albano. an Italian prosecutor who alleges that the Bulgarians hired Mr. Agea. a Turk, to kill the pope.

"It looks substantial." said one high intelligence official. "There is too much to be coincidence."

The U.S. government apparently has obtained copies of the Italian state prosecutor's secret 77-page report which seeks a formal charge and trial of three Bulgarians and six Turks.

Some State Department officials dence establishes a substantial relationship between Mr. Agea and the Bulgarians. But they said it does not necessarily follow that the contacts were started to set up a plot against the pope.

"It's fair to say there is a good deal of smoke, but there's no smoking gun," one official said. "I think the Italians can make a persuasive case that there was a Bulgarian connection. Whether that was for the purpose of using him to kill the Agea stayed in the summer of 1980, Some State Department experts pope, we don't know. Maybe they other purpose. He came out of shady circles."

Another intelligence official said it was also possible that Mr. Agea was an "enforcer in the drug trade"

Mr. Agca, who was arrested im-mediately after the shooting of the pope in St. Peter's Square on May 13, 1981, claimed at first that he was acting alone and was quickly tried, convicted and sentenced to life in prison. It was not until May 1982, a year later, that Mr. Agca began to talk about his relationship with the Bulgarians, according to published excerpts from the Italian

By November 1982, the Italians had arrested a Bulgarian airline official, Sergei I. Antonov, in connection with the plot, based on Mr. Agea's descriptions of the meetings he had had with Bulgarians.

It reportedly was not until De-cember 1982 that Mr. Agea told Italian investigators about a key piece of evidence: a sealed Bulgaricv's files that Mr. Agea was in the an Embassy truck that was to have been used to smuggle him out of the country after the attack. The prosecutor checked and

Soviet Stays Firm on Afghanistan But Supports UN Mediation Effort

MOSCOW -- President Konstantin U. Chernenko on Friday told the secretary-general of the United Nations, Javier Pérez de Cuéllar, that Moscow supported UN mediation on Afghanistan, but he made it clear that there was no change in Soviet terms for a settlement.

The Foreign Ministry spokesman, Vladimir Lomeiko, said Mr. Chernenko and Mr. Pérez de Cuéllar had "exchanged views on a possible solution" of the Afghan problem. He said the Soviet leader had stressed his backing for the efforts of the secretary-general.

Mr. Chernenko's remarks echoed the longstanding Soviet position that the guerrilla war against the Kabul government was directed and financed by foreign powers, mainly the United States. Moscow says it will withdraw its estimated 110,000 troops only when asked to do so by Kabul and with international guarantees on Afghan security.

Stravinsky and Sculpture: Two Delightful Shows in Basel

By John Russell New York Times Service

B ASEL, Switzerland — If you tell people that you are going to Basel on vacation, they laugh. If you tell them that for anyone who is concerned with the cultural history of Europe in the past 100 years, Basel this summer has exhibitions that are worth crossing the world to see, they don't believe it.

And no doubt it is true that the ancient and inter- garden, straight from Act 2 of Wagner's "Parsifal." mittently majestic Swiss city of Basel does not as a rule rank high with visitors to Europe.

Basel, however, has one of the great museums of the world, with collections that range the centuries from Hans Holbein to Joseph Benys, and it has been partic-ularly attentive to our own century. (The Basel Knnst-museum was buying the American Abstract Expressionists at a time when most American museums would not give them the time of day.) There were local collectors who went deep into Picasso, Braque and Lèger very early on.

After World War II the Basier Kunsthalle, a pioneer center for temporary exhibitions, saw to it that the best of living art was trucked in and out of Basel. The Galerie Beyeler in the Bäumleingasse is one of the best places in the world in which to buy — if you can afford them — major works of 20th-century art. Just a year or two ago Madame Sacher-Hoffman, long prominent in the cultural life of Basel and the beneficiary of one of the largest pharmaceutical fortunes, made it possible for two derelict factories by the Rhine to be turned into a museum of contemporary art.

The normal diet currently is supplemented by a sculpture through Sept. 30).

Inch for inch, the Merian Park is one of the most voluptuous of all European public gardens. As tempting to the nose as to the eye, it is a place of swelling groves and secret corners. By comparison with its counterparts in other cities, it is a veritable Klingsor's

Art in those seductive spaces might be no more than a granutous garnish, but this exhibit offers a concise history of 20th-century sculpture that could hardly be bettered. The second floor of the Museums-Halle, a barnlike structure that still has rustic overtones, offers, for instance, 14 sculptures by Picasso, eight by Matisse, eight by Giacometti and smaller groups by Arp. Duchamp, Brancusi, Gabo, González, Magritte, Miró, Moholy-Nagy, Tatlin and Rodchenko. The works are key pieces in the canon of 20th-century sculpture.

In the open-air part of the show the organizers, Ernst Beyeler, Reinhold Hohl and Martin Schwander, have devised thoughtful placings for such sculptors as Calder, Moore, David Smith, Mark di Suvero, Dubuffet and Richard Serra. They have also found room in what is normally the Historical Museum of the Carriage and Sled for theatrical figures costumed by Kasimir Malevich and Oskar Schlemmer, and they have taken a flyer on work by such sculptors as Tony Cragg, Richard Deacon and Peter Fischli. On a fine day, this is a show in which education and delight could hardly be better matched.

The Stravinsky exhibit in the Kunstmuseum is major exhibition dedicated to Igor Stravinsky at the based primarily upon the huge collection of manu-Kunstmuseum and a survey of 20th-century sculpture scripts, letters, telegrams, portraits in many media, that ranges over many acres, indoors and out, in playbills, photograph albums and miscellaneous mem-

Many people were sorry to see the collection leave the country in which Stravinsky had lived for more than 30 years, but for Paul Sacher the acquisition was one that crowned the oyalty of a lifetime to Stravinsky and his music.

Under the circumstances, it is natural that the show should stress the importance of Switzerland in Stravinsky's career. French-speaking Switzerland was Stravinsky's principal base from 1910 to 1920, during which time he completed "The Rite of Spring" and produced, among much else, "Le Rossignol," "Ren-ard," "L'Histoire du Soldat" and "Pulcinella."

As to Stravinsky's working methods, the show has much to teach us. Individual drafts and headlong sketches speak as clearly, in this context, as the look of the finished work, which often looks as if it had been cut with a diamond.

Whether at 20 or well into his 80s, Stravinsky the irritable precisionist is vividly present. But while we can all follow the slither of his pencil on the paper, very few of us can hear what is being written. Nor is it portrait of Diaghilev, done in 1921, that stands out on everyone who can decipher the tone-row that is used in its merits and not as a curiosity. The Dove Descending Breaks the Air" and monitor its appearance in the completed anthem.

Doubtless for that reason, the organizers of the show have varied our diet by including not only a large selection of memorabilia from the estate but paintings, drawings, photographs and stage designs from other sources. Some of these additions are very distinguished indeed. Eleven of the original costumes made done justice to a career that changed the course not

> The future Picasso Museum in Paris has come up with no fewer than 23 works on paper that relate to Picasso's scenery and costumes for "Pulcinella" and crowned that particular display with the mask that was made for Leonide Massine when he appeared in that most delectable of entertainments. Those who prize Picasso's cover for Stravinsky's "Ragtime" as the very apotheosis of the single unbroken line will find that the Picasso Museum has turned up seven variants

The original production of "L'Histoire du Soldat" a triumph of wit and economy, carried through in 1918 despite wartime conditions — is amply documented both by René Auberjonois, who was responsible for sets and costumes, and by Stravinsky's two sons, who at the time were 8 and 11. Igor Stravinsky himself plays a cameo role as painter and draftsman in this part of the show, with above all a tiny pencil

After the death of Diaghilev in 1929 the pictorial matter grows thin. Some things - David Hockney's designs for "The Rake's Progress," above all - and some of the busis and paintings of Stravinsky himself would better have been marked "Return to sender." But fundamentally this is a glorious affair, in which Christian Geelhaar, the museum's young director, has in 1913 by Nicholas Roerich for the premiere of "The only of music but of much else besides

The 19th century's obsessive medicalization of sex spawned a host of what Michel Foucault, the French historian of sexuality, calls 'strange baptismal names" Krafft-Ebing's zoophiles and zooerasts, Rohleder's auto-monosexualists; mixoscophiles, gynecomasts and sexoesthetic inverts. And as homosexuality was defined, and acquired its own codes of dress and behavior, individual homosexuals, newly aware of themselves as a group, began to organize and ex-

The representation of homosexuality in art began to move from the tastefully bound editions of erotica and the pseudo-classical photographs of nude boys on rocks to a wider audience. In addition to the films that allowed the Marlene Dietrichs of the day to affect the "Garconne" style, with top hat, cigar and bow tie, the exhibition amply documents the emergence of osexuality as a serious subject treated on film.

A peculiarly German touch is lent by the sections on Dr. Magnus Hirschfeld, founder in 1919 of the Institute for Sexual Science. His medical probings make a robust contrast with the languid line drawings of Renée Sintenis and Jeanne dale, the candidate who "dares to be cautious," So much for the punditry of Richard Nixon, who predicted that Walter Mondale would pick Gary Hart as his running mate. So much for those who said the Mondale interviewing process evoked Jimmy Carter. Mr. Mondale's choice of Geraldine Ferraro turned out to be more reminiscent of Lyndon Johnson's love of surprise, drama and history.

Ferraro's Historic Firsts

The Ferraro choice is all of those things. It enlivens a leaden campaign season. It energizes the Democrats as they set off for their convention. And for all Americans, not just women, it is a genuinely historic moment. Ms. Ferraro is the first woman on a major party's national ticket. Even some supporters of President Reagan glow with satisfaction.

There is another first here that may turn out to be just as important. Geraldine Ferraro is not only the first woman on a major party's ticker, she is also the first Italian-American.

New Yorkers feel a special satisfaction at her selection, not out of provincialism but out of knowledge. The verbs of Geraldine Ferrato's life convey her solidity: worked, earned, raised, prosecuted, ran, won, led. In selecting her. Mr. Mondale pays signal tribute to the difficult path pursued by many American women. What is far from clear is how much electoral good that does. For all the excitement, there is also a backlash of feelings that run the other way. A woman on the ticket repels some men — and some women.

Meanwhile, by choosing a woman after or-

So much for the snickers about Boring Mon-ganized women demanded it. Mr. Mondale risks looking coerced. Yet, in fairness, it was he who had raised the idea. By choosing a woman who seems untested on the national stage, it will be said that Mr. Mondale has passed over better qualified men. There is an easy answer to that complaint: Who? By choosing a woman, it is said, Mr. Mondale looks desperate, driven to gamble that the women's vote will turn into a plus. Maybe, but so what? That has always been the first criterion for running mates: Who will bring the most to the ticket?

Consider Ms. Ferraro's heritage. There are some 13 million Italian-Americans, concentrated in 10 important states. They have risen high in American society yet their pride remains stifled. What is the closest an Italian-American has come to being elected to the White House? Al Smith's maternal grandfather was Italian. How many Italian-Americans have been appointed to the Supreme Court? None. How many have ever served in the Cabinet? Only four. As with other ethnic groups, as Italian-Americans prosper they have edged away from their traditional identification with Democrats. A candidate named Ferraro might well inspire a pride and patriotism that will retain and retard. Many Italian-Americans reflect the neighborhood values of other working-class families. That is true in the district Ms. Ferraro represents in Congress. If they identify with her as well nationally as in New York's Ninth District, she may end up with another first.

Europe in Need of a Lift

Crises in the European Community are so frequent that it has become hard to get excited about them. Eventually they are resolved and the customs union is preserved. The budget crisis settled recently was no more critical than many others of the last 27 years. But it dragged on for so long that it conveyed a strong new message: If the union of Common Market nations intends to grow toward a political confederation, and perhaps even if it wants only to survive, it needs a new impetus.

The budget battle was over Britain's contribution. Britain felt, with reason, that it was being asked to contribute too large a share. In five long years of debate the issue had become an obsession. The endless argument crippled EC operations, already disturbed by the pain of a global recession. As they bickered, the members became irritated at the sluggish bureaucracy they had created in Brussels, and at their own sluggish policy-making. A quartercentury after they had begun to dream of a united Europe, they came to understand that they had taken tremendous strides to remove their tariffs but had done little else of equal significance. The gloom was heavy.

With this budget wrangle now settled, it is time for the Community to pick up speed again, if it can. As a practical matter, the first big items of postponed business are the membership applications of Spain and Portugal. President Mitterrand of France, who helped to overcome the budget crisis, has other ideas for a "relaunching"—leaving out the British if they prefer. He proposes to renegotiate the EC's constitution, the 1956 Treaty of Rome, to expand its concerns from economics to include education, defense and politics. There are hints that he might even dilute the one-nation veto - the weapon of France under de Gaulle. Prime Minister Thatcher of Britain offers a less sweeping but also constructive agenda: a genuinely "common" market that removes all trade impediments, not just tariffs and quotas. Belgium, for instance, locked out other countries' margarine for a time by requiring that it be cubed rather than oblong. And all the members tend still to favor domestic suppliers in their governmental procurement. Prime Minister Thatcher also wants to facilitate the movement of people across national frontiers and to streamline the Brussels bureaucracy.

Americans can sometimes get hurt by the economic success of the European union, but they have a sizable stake in its political progress. The union's bedrock is the peaceful collaboration of France and West Germany, upon which also depends the strength and defense of all Western Europe.

well. In population growth, as in economic ble without reductions in births. growth, sensible policies can make an important difference for the better.

The report makes short shrift of the notion - embodied in a recent White House draft position paper — that economic development can solve the problem. The developing countries, which will add almost 5 billion people by the middle of the next century, are in far different circumstances from those of the developed countries when these went through their periods of rapid industrialization.

Not only do most developing countries lack comparable human and physical capital, opportunities for agricultural expansion or emigration and well-developed social and political institutions, they are also starting from a vastly less favorable population situation. Their population bases are already much larger in relative terms, and their population growth rates are much higher. Rural population growth in the now-developed countries averaged only I percent a year in the 19th century. With mortality rates now much lower, most developing countries have averaged between 2- and 4-percent growth in recent decades.

While almost every country has experienced some economic growth, rapid population expansion has already greatly increased the per capita income gap between the have and havenot nations. The worst victims of these trends are, of course, children, Frequent childbearing

this dreary year of political conversation, a hit of

SAN FRANCISCO — Step aside cynics and assorted pols who've been around too long to believe that anything really changes. We have now experienced the first genuine case of goose bumps in the 1984 election, "American history is about doors being opened," Geraldine Ferraro said and the door is now open to her. said, and the door is now open to her.

The last weeks have been a roller coaster trip that would have challenged the equilibrium of Sally Ride. We hit one of those rare moments when the right thing to do was also the politically savvy thing to do. For a while it was not clear that Mr. Mondale would seize the moment. Now, the running mate has injected a huge "wow" into adrenaline, a rush of good feeling. And as Gerry Ferraro likes to say, "Not bad for a housewife from Queens, huh?

Gerry Ferraro is no generic all-purpose "wom-an" set up as a cardboard figure of progress. Under the silk-dress-and-pearls look of the three-term congresswoman is a feisty, rougharound-the-edges independent who ran for reelection under the appropriate slogan, "Finally a Tough Democrat." This is not the safe "junior partner figure Mr. Mondale might have chosen. Part of Ms. Ferraro's charm and part of the risk is not just her sex, but her personality.

This lady can be engaging and flip, full of warmth and able to shoot from the lip. When a Reagan arms control honcho complained to her. about the cost of entitlement programs, she shot back. The biggest entitlement is the defense budget!" At times in these high-pressure weeks, she snapped at reporters who asked her, "Would you be considered for the job if your name was Gerald Ferraro?" She is, in short, real. During an interview last winter, she talked with horror at the way Vice President George Bush turned himself into a Reagan clone. She could not make such a transformation, nor will she have to. In their first meeting in Minnesota, Ms. Ferraro's New York bluntness did not quite fit the Midwestern Mondale style, but they are on the same political wavelength.

Her "newness," her "fresh face" is a plus on the political scene, although she suffers from newcomer syndrome. Said a high-ranking party official, "Sometimes she has the problem a lot of women have — taking themselves seriously." It takes some doing to change your self-image from a former housewife to a future vice president. The hope is that she can keep the down-home

Ferraro: 'There's an Electricity in the Air' style intact while smoothing out the rough edges under the pressure of a national political cam-paign. As Mondale advisor Anne Wexler says. She may make some mistakes, but nothing like the ones that Reagan made. You won't find Ferraro saying that trees cause pollution." The plusses on the Ferraro ledger are enormous. The brightest is that goose-bump factor. As Americans, we are particularly vulnerable to dream stories and, as Mr. Mondale noted, Ms. Ferraro's life has everything but the log cabin.

She is the "self-made" woman who remembers where she has been and what it felt like. Her father died when she was 8 and her mother went to work stringing beads in the garment industry. She was the scholarship student in school. She has been a teacher, a night law student and a full-time mother to three children, the eldest of whom works for Salomon Brothers. "My daughter the beautiful banker," she says with wry pride. In the D.A.'s office in Queens, Ms. Ferraro worked as a prosecutor in the Special Victim's Rurary and became as the says." "relly crayy on

Bureau and became, as she says, "really crazy on the subject of rape." She knows what it is like to be one of two women in a law school class. She knows what it is like to have a bank refuse her money for a political campaign unless her husband co-signs for the loan. And she knows what it is like to represent a district of working-class people and elderly hit by Reaganomics. In the coming weeks Ms. Ferraro will have her clothes, her children, her husband, her accent, her record, her every sentence and every move scrutinized. As the number one woman in the number two spot she will be a walking, talking class action on how "women" perform.

For the moment, let's talk history, Before 1920, women in the United States were not allowed to vote. In 1984, Gerry Ferraro is running for vice president. Ms. Ferraro has said it: There's an electricity in the air."

A 'Presidential' Mondale Debuts in San Francisco

By David S. Broder

C AN FRANCISCO — One of the great myths of American politics is that national political conventions have lost their importance since the primaries have taken over the function of picking the presidential nominee. That impression is false.

Convention week is important not because it closes the nominating period but because it is the start of the general election. It is the time when most voters take their first serious look at the candidates and their parties, and begin to focus on the choice they will make in November.

Because he recognized this fundamental fact, Walter Mondale has now produced an action that altered the previous impression of him and perhaps put him closer to "presidential status" than he has ever been before. For years Mr. Mondale has been plagued by his reputation as cautious, conventional and colorless. By choosing Geraldine Ferraro as his running mate and announcing the decision on the eve of the convention. he has come on stage as a much bolder and more commanding figure than he ever before seemed. The contrast is particularly striking because this has been a tough year for him. Last summer he was the consensus choice of party insiders for the nomination. But instead of the easy ride he expected, it was a bitter struggle that left him scarred and emotionally drained by the time he cinched victory on June 6. "Too many debates, too many defeats," said a senior Reagan adviser, explaining why Mr. Mondale found himself running farther behind the president in the polls after he secured the Democratic nomination than he did six months earlier when he was only one of eight pursuing the prize. It was not only the Reagan team that thought Mr. Mondale had been weakened. As he became a target of pressure tactics from defeated rivals Gary Hart and Jesse Jackson on parrules, and from feminists on the choice of a running mate, a congressional supporter fretted: "Mondale is starting to look like a nunching bag." But that is no longer the case. Now Walter Mondale is the first major party nominee to select a woman runmate and the first non-incumbent to announce his choice before the convention opened. He took command of a tricky situation and asserted his control. He passed the first test of his plausibility as president with flying colors — at a time when many voters are beginning to form their impression of his character and his capacity for leadership. For an example of what that kind of performance can do for a candidate, you need go back no farther than four years — to Ronald Reagan and the Republicans in Detroit. In the opening days of that condiscussion about inviting former President Gerald Ford to join his ticket. The negotiations became pub-lic long before they reached any agreement, and for most of the third day the process seemed to be running away from Mr. Reagan's control. Just when runaway rutners had them sealing an agreement, Mr. Reagan cut off the talks with Mr. Ford and, in defiance of protocol, went to the convention hall himself to tell the with George Bush. The decisiveness and authority with which he resolved the situation turned a potential fiasco into an imforgettable moment that stamped Mr. Reagan "presidential." Critics were saying recently that Mr. Mondale let the public parade of his vice presidential prospects go on so long that he had lost control of the choice. By his timely choice of Ms. Ferraro, he asserted a presidential sense of command.

It reminded me of something his longtime aide and adviser, Michael Berman, told me last autumn. "It's an enormous risk for an individual to run for president," Mr. Berman said. All those who had "sponsored" him in the past would, in a sense, become irrelevant. "Now it's not Jimmy Carter, or Hubert Humphrey, or the Minnesota Democratic Farmer-Labor Party on the ballot. It's Walter Mondale, pure and simple. And he's got to answer the question: Can I be e leader people want?" The answers he now provides, starting with the choice of Ms. Ferraro, are more important to his future than anything he has done before.

The Party Platform Aims for Fiscal Respectability

W ASHINGTON — The Democratic platform to be presented to the convention in San Francisco will be the first since 1948 not to call for a mandatory national health insurance program. This is a telling symbol of a play-it-safe approach under Walter Mondale in which the Democrats want to be perceived as fiscally trustworthy.

Mr. Mondale and the Democrats he leads want to be perceived as sounder than the Republicans. who have run up huge deficits, with attendant high interest rates. Says Walter W. Heller, who was an economic adviser to Presidents Kennedy and Johnson and has known Mr. Mondale for 30 years: Fritz Mondale is no bomb thrower, no flaming liberal. He is, in fact, a moderate and cautious middle-of-the-roader on fiscal matters."

If there is a central economic theme in the Democratic platform this year, it is the need to reduce the dangerous federal budget deficit.

Gone are the calls of the 1976 and 1980 platforms for funding of new social programs and damn the expense. The Mondale-controlled platform fairly reeks of responsibility. It merely calls for the restoration of the social budget cuts en-lorced by the Reagan administration — back to e were, in other words, but not beyond. Mr. Mondale's advisers these days stress not his liberal record as a senator (he was a free-trader) but the cautious, prudent side. The platform has been carefully crafted to bolster that image.

Economist George Perry of the Brookings Insti-tution has advised Mr. Mondale that his first order of business as president should be to cut the budget "a lot." But the platform, after a deft diagnosis of how the deficit grew under Mr. Reagan, does not follow through with meaningful proposals to reduce it. There is a suggestion (but no details) for "a simpler, more equitable and more progressive tax system," but no clear call for a major tax increase.

The platform calls for reducing the rate of growth of the military budget, but does not advocate an actual cut in military spending. The Jackson forces are unlikely to have the power to pass a minority plank calling for a real cut in defense.

On domestic spending the platform eschews any cuts in Social Security spending, "now and in the future." It proposes to control escalating costs of health services. Like the Republicans, the Democrats promise to "scour the budget for other areas of wasteful or unnecessary spending." In the area of industrial policy, Mr. Mondale's unfortunate commitment to labor's effort to install a protectionist "local auto-content" bill ran into the opposition of even his own advisers. But the platform issues a general call for protection from unfair import competition," whatever that is. There is a whining note on trade issues: "Once-dominant U.S. industries are now hard-pressed."

The platform proposes an Economic Cooperation Council to hammer out industrial policies. The council would have no power, but the tone is one of pandering to special interests seeking to protect inefficient industries.

Although "local content" is not in the platform, many Democrats worry that if Mr. Mondale is elected, the AFL-CIO would try to get him to deliver on his promise, and that he would find it difficult not to keep his word.

Will the new, conservative clothes that the Democrats now wear help them win? Can Mr. Mondale, with his commitments to labor and other groups, be effective? Most of the party bigwigs think Mr. Mondale had no choice. Stuart Eizenstat, who was an adviser to President Carter, observes that the resources for the old, liberal, aggressive approach "are simply not there. We live in more conservative times, and the platform document is realistic."

The Washington Post.

But a Scattershot Foreign Policy Misses the Target

WASHINGTON — It is time to w make the Western Hemisphere a top priority." And "the security of Israel and the pursuit of peace in the Middle East are fundamental priorities for American foreign policy."
And "our national interest demands that we give [Africa] a much higher priority." And so it goes on in the Democratic Party platform.

U.S.-Soviet relations are "a critical element of our security policy," just as "maintaining a strong alliance is critically important." The United States under the Democrats will be strong - but flexible in negotiation. That is what happens when a political party out of office gets out of the habit of having to make hard choices. Everything is possible in a Democratic platform plank on "Peace, Security and Freedom" that offers almost pre-cisely what a deficit-ridden government and a world-weary electorate least need. The profusion of priorities and the confusion of concerns leave you wondering what these platform drafters really, truly care about.

Eight years ago the Democratic platform was promising to knock as much as $7 billion a year from military spending without endangering U.S. security. It talked of "normalization" of relations with Vietnam and of disengaging U.S. troops from South Korea. It spoke of the Palestinian issue in terms of "Arab refugees." The human rights issue was the central theme. America's first line of defense depended "on the internal strength of American society."

. By Philip Geyelin

The 1980 Democratic platform impressed me at the time with its discoveries about the real world, as distinct from Jimmy Carter's dream world of 1976. It promised "real growth" in military spending of 3 percent. The collapse of Iran, the hostage crisis and the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan had concentrated strategic attention on the Gulf and the need for "a clear recognition of the reality of Soviet power." Camp David had enriched the party's understanding of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

What now? This: a contortionist's effort to hang on to the Jimmy Cartes dream world as a no-less-noble goal now than it was eight years ago, even while hanging tough against the dan-gers lurking in the real world and simultaneously holding out the pro-mise of hardheaded alternatives to Reagan administration policy.
Thus the platform promises no more "easy and abusive anti-Soviet rhetoric as a substitute for strength progress and careful use of power."

The heavy emphasis is on arms control, starting with a quick presidential initiative for "temporary, verifiable and mutual moratoria" on testing of assorted nuclear weapons.

This "should lead promptly" to a nuclear freeze, the platform says at one point. But it goes on to say that the Democrats are of course under no illusion that any of its arms control proposals "will be easy to achieve." The platform promises "no illusions about the forces arrayed against the Democratic cause in our time." But plank after plank has to be taken on faith that all of a sudden the world will be a much different place with a Democrat in the White House. Examples: The European allies will do much more in their own defense, thus lightening America's load.

The Pentagon will stop being wasteful. The Soviets will turn away from their "relentless military buildup" in favor of the mutual survival to be found in arms control. The Arabs will negotiate even as America strengthens strategic cooperation with Israel and moves its embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem. Greece and Turkey will come to terms over Cyprus. The Irish conflict will be resolved. The East European satellites will yield to U.S. encouragement and strike up independent relationships with America, while liberalizing domestic policies. South Africa will knuckle under to U.S. pressures and abandon apartheid. Central Ameri-cans will work out some negotiated resolution of their conflicts and Fidel Castro will end his support for violent revolution, in return for stabi-lized relations with the United States. It was John Kennedy, 21 years ago, who first spoke of making the world "safe for diversity." But he wisely added a cautionary note: "We must deal with the world as it is." Washington Post Writers Group.

Experts Say High Inflation Record Har state of the s Will Not Return in 1980s

By PETER T. KILBORN

New York Times Service

TASHINGTON — Remarkably, in the face of the economy's continued rapid growth, the stubbornly high inflation that blighted the U.S. economy for more than a decade has dissipated, and a vast majority of the nation's economists see little reason for it to return for as far as they can predict into the 1980s. Prices continue to rise, of course, but at lower rates than the country has seen since the 1960s. And producer prices were unchanged in June for the third straight month

Some experts say the United States may have entered a long-lived period of disinflation in which a broad range of prices would increase at a rate significantly slower than in the past.

Economists attribute this slowing of inflation partly to the determination of the Federal Reserve to discourage rising prices by restraining moneysupply growth, starving credit demand and letting interest

They also cite the fortuitous anti-inflationary convergence of several other forces: the dollar's strength, softening raw material prices, a low level of wage increases and deregula-tion of such industries as airlines and telecommunications.

As a result, all the gauges of inflation have slowed markedly. The Consumer Price Index rose at an annual rate of only 3.6 percent for the three months through May, lower even than the 3.8 percent rate for last year. The government expects a still broader gauge, the implicit price deflator of the gross national product, which measures all prices in the economy, not just those paid by consumers, to increase at only a 2.8-percent rate in the second quarter. In 1979, by contrast consumer prices climbed 13. second quarter. In 1979, by contrast, consumer prices climbed 13 percent and the other indexes rose almost as much.

"Inflation is a highly inertial process," said William Nordhaus, professor of economics at Yale and an adviser to President Jimmy Carter in 1977-78. "It will go along at whatever rate it has been going along at until it's shocked to a different level."

OST economists credit the Fed with wringing inflation out of the economy, beginning soon after Mr. Carter appointed Paul A. Volcker as Fed chairman in 1979. The Fed then changed its policies from trying to control inflation by regulating interest rates to managing money-supply growth.

The Fed has since shifted to a more eclectic policy, watching the performance of the overall economy and interest rates as well as the money supply. But most economists believe it has maintained enough pressure on the money-supply to counteract infla-tionary forces inherent in federal-budget-deficit growth.

Economists view the dollar's strength as anti-inflationary be-cause it makes U.S. exports, which must be purchased in dollars, more expensive for other countries. In turn, it gives foreign companies a price advantage in the United States, with the result that the consequent surge in imports discourages U.S. industry from raising prices. The trade deficit this year is likely to reach a record $110 billion to $120 billion.

As with other imports, prices of raw materials from abroad are cheaper because of the strong dollar. This helps keep down production costs, relieving the importing companies' need to

The debts of the developing countries, especially those of Latin America, also put pressure on commodity prices. "To make interest payments on their loans," said Edward Yardeni, economist at Prodential-Bache Securities, "they have to scrapble for foreign exchange. So they're selling their commodities, some times at a loss.

Their efforts have led to overproduction in such commodities as copper and aluminum, keeping prices down worldwide. Although aluminum producers in the United States, for example, (Continued on Page 11, Col. 7)

NEW YORK - International Business Machines Corp., the world's largest computer company, said Friday that its profit rose 20 percent in the second quarter to a record $1.62 billion, and that orders continued to grow briskly.

Sales climbed 16 percent to a record $11.20 billion, surpassing the previous second-quarter high of $9.59 billion last year.

For the first half of 1984, earnings rose 21 percent to $2.83 billion from $2.32 billion and sales increased 16 percent to $20.78 billion from $17.88 billion in the yearearlier period.

The company has had nine straight quarters of profits rising by more than 20 percent.

"IBM clearly is showing major momentum," said George Elling, a computer-industry analyst at the investment firm of Oppenheimer &

The record net eclipsed the previous high of $1.34 billion in the year-earlier quarter.

After the figures were released, IBM stock rose 87½ cents to close at $105.25 a share late in Friday's session. Analysts were impressed by the size of the gains in net and sales compared with the very strong performance of a year ago. "You have to view this as absolutely first rate in every respect," said Stephen McClellan, an analyst at Salomon Brothers Inc. "It's going to be a pretty tough act for many companies to follow."

The performance also came on top of a 23-percent increase in profit and a 15-percent gain in sales in the first quarter.

"The positive trends of the first quarter continue with acceptance of our products remaining high," John Opel, IBM's chairman, said in a statement released at the company's headquarters in suburban Armonk, New York.

Thousands of applications await processing at the Japanese Patent Office. The agency's patent procedures have become a source of Japan-U.S. trade friction.

U.S. Requests for Patents in Japan Stalled by Delays, Trade Friction

By Andrew Pollack New York Times Service

TOKYO — In 1973, Allied Corp. applied for a patent in Japan covering a new type of material known as amorphous

"At the time of the filing we recognized it as a pioneering pat-ent," said Harry Knutson, the Tokyo representative of Allied, which is based in Morristown, New Jersey. What Allied did not foresee was how difficult it would be to get the patent. Its application was opposed by Japanese com-panies and it was bogged down in procedural delays for 10 years. Nor was Allied's experience unique. The growing high-tech-nology rivalry between the Unit-ed States and Japan is being fought not only in the laboratory and factory but also in the patent office. As a result, patent procedures have become a source of friction between the two nations. In Allied's case, for example, several Japanese companies, in-cluding Hitachi and Nippon and the company received its Steel, began selling their own amorphous-metal products as it waited for the patent. Allied filed a complaint with the International Trade Commission, a federal agency, to stop shipments of such products into the United States, claiming they infringed on Allied's U.S. patents.

The story has a happy ending for Allied. The ITC ruled tenta-

Japanese patent last March. Al-lied's Japanese licensee now plans to build a factory in Japan to make amorphous metals. But similar skirmishes continue. It takes an average of six years to get a patent in Japan, triple the time needed in the United States.

Americans complain that such delays make it hard to license technology or sell it in Japan. And since patent protection lasts 20 years, dated from the day of application, a patent granted af-ter 10 years has already lost half its useful life. Moreover, the Americans complain, the system allows other companies to copy their technology, since patent applications are made public after 18 months.

"It's a very inadequate system and they are not anxious to improve it," said Robert F. Connelly, president of International echnical Trading Inc., a trading company in Tokyo.

U.S. Prices Flat In June as Sales, Production Rose

By John M. Berry Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - U.S. producer prices for finished goods in June were unchanged for the third month in a row while retail sales and industrial production continued to show healthy gains, the gov-ernment reported Friday. The combination of low inflation and economic expansion is expectat least for the remainder of this

"This morning's news looks like America hit the jackpot," President Ronald Reagan told a group of Republican women at the White

Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan said the reports indicate that "the economy continues to grow at a strong and stable pace while inflationary forces remain dormant."

On a quarterly basis, the price news was even a bit better, with the second quarter's seasonally adjust-ed average for finished goods 0.3 percent lower than for the first quarter, the Labor Department said in its report. Last month, declining food and gasoline prices offset increases for other items, including eigerettes and jewelry. The second-quarter performance was the best since the first quarter of 1983, when a sharp drop in oil prices led to a 1.5-percent decline

Adding to the good economic news, the Commerce Department announced Friday a 0.8-percent rise in retail sales last month to a seasonally adjusted $109 billion. The increase followed a revised 0.5percent gain in May and a large 3.5-percent jump in April.

Commerce Secretary Makcolm Baldrige called the June increase "moderate" and said that it "adds to the evidence that economic growth is settling back to a sustainable pace."

He added: "As a result of April's sales bulge, household spending contributed substantially to second-quarter growth in GNP. The slower May and June advances in consumer spending and the recent decline in housing starts are signaling the economy's transition to a more moderate rate of expansion."

Gross national product is the total value of goods and services, including income from investments

Meanwhile, a report from the Federal Reserve showed the output of the nation's factories, mines and utilities up 0.5 percent in June, fol-lowing a 0.4-percent increase in May and a 0.9-percent gain in Production of business equipment and military and space goods rose strongly and utility output was up 1.4 percent, primarily because of unusually hot weather in June that resulted in strong demand for electricity. Mine production was also up 1.1 percent because of increases in coal production and oil and gas well drilling.

Jim Pihera, an economist and a member of Georgia State University's price-forecasting project, said that despite earlier widespread fears of a rebound, inflation is not accelerating. "I just don't see any big inflation numbers out there unless the wage settlements coming up really do some strange things," Mr. Pihera said. "The commodities markets in the last couple of weeks have more or less collapsed."

Good luck with weather, oil prices and intense foreign competition bolstered by a strong dollar are the major factors benefiting U.S. businesses and consumers, he indi-

Most forecasters have been revising upward their estimates of economic growth for the quarter just ended and for the remainder of the year but see little additional inflation. The consumer price index, which covers services and well as the consumer goods included in the producer price index, has been rising at about a 4-percent annual

Making import barriers conditional on modernization is not a new idea in the steel business. Industry-backed legislation to impose a steel-import quota contains such a provision, calling for acrossthe-board quotas limiting foreign steel to 15 percent of U.S. consumption once the Commerce Department has certified that plans have been made to use the cash flow for new steel investment.

On Wednesday, the ITC recommended that President Ronald Reagan set five-year import quotas of 6.4 percent to 31.8 percent depending on the product and year. It also recommended raising import duties after imports of steel totaling 1.5 million tons. The ruling follows ITC confir-

Swiss Said to Make Offer to Resolve Mark Rich Dispute

The Associated Press

BERN - Swiss authorities moved Friday to end an impasse with the United States over the case of Switzerland-based commodities broker Marc Rich Ltd., offering to hand over documents they previously had withheld if the United States stops imposing a $50,000-a-day fine on Marc Rich.

Switzerland's Justice Department said a dip-lomatic note agreeing to cooperate with the U.S. probe of alleged tax violations by the Marc Rich firm was sent to the U.S. State Department in Washington by Swiss Ambassador Klaus Ja-

The note says that the Swiss want the United U.S. District Court Judge Leonard B. Sand in an effort to get documents from the company that had been seized by Swiss authorities to protect Switzerland's corporate secrecy law. In return, the Swiss would hand over the

That could end an over one-year-old stale-mate in the case that has troubled U.S.-Swiss elations.

"The federal council is confident that by handing over this note, a solution can be found that is satisfying to both parties," the note said, according to a Justice Department spokesman, Jorg Kistler.

Swiss authorities seized the documents on Aug. 12, 1983 and Feb. 9, 1984, during the investigation of the Marc Rich affair to prevent the company from complying with a U.S. court order and preserve Swiss legal sovereignty.

"What we wanted all along was that Swiss sovereignty be respected and that documents only be handed over through channels along the lines of bilateral treaties and the Swiss federal laws on legal aid," Mr. Kistler said.

Mr. Rich, who holds U.S. and Belgian citi-zenship, was said to be in Switzerland but could not be reached for comment through his office in Zug, a tax-haven south of the financial capi-tal of Zurich. The reclusive Mr. Rich has re-fused to comment on the case, which is said to be one of the biggest ever filed involving tax Financial sources said Mr. Rich might refuse to go along with the Swiss initiative, throwing the question into the Federal Tribunal, or supreme court, in Lausanne, and extending it for several years.

Officials at the U.S. Embassy in Bern would not comment on the Justice Department state-

The case is the latest in a series of conflicts between the United States and Switzerland over the extent of U.S. jurisdiction in legal matters

By Robert J. Cole New York Times Service

NEW YORK — A group of investors headed by William Siegel, a former executive of ARA Services Inc., has offered to buy the company for $60 a share, or $732 million.

ARA, however, immediately as-sailed the offer as "unsolicited." Joseph Neubauer, chairman, said Thursday that the company strong-ly opposed the offer, calling it "in-adequate and not in the best interest of the company and its shareholders."

ARA, based in Philadelphia, is the world's largest food-service

Its other operations include rental of uniforms and industrial lin-ens, distribution of magazines and books, management of child-care and health-care operations, a school bus service and a trucking company.

The company reported revenue for the fiscal six months ended March 30 of $1.7 billion, up 13 percent from $1.5 billion a year earlier. Profits rose 15.9 percent, to $33.5 million, from $28.9 million the year before.

Mr. Siegel, who resigned from his position as executive vice president of ARA in 1980, said he was heading the investor group along with B.J. McCombs of San Antonio and Charles Thomas of Houston, two wealthy Texas businessmen who both own major Ford dealerships.

Financial institutions that would also invest in the venture, Mr. Siegel said, would be headed by Drexel Burnham Lambert, the Wall Street investment house. The plan, he said, contemplated that ARA's current management participate in the ownership.

The No. 3 automaker said its sales are up 17.9 percent so far this year.

HEAD OF INFORMATICS

Who will be responsible for the overall organization of Automatic Data Processing in the Medical Department, comprising project and resource planning and surveillance and the elaboration of information concepts. He/she will lead a small team of specialists and and will work in close collaboration with the Departmental Management, the users of the system and central ADP units.

This is a new and challenging position and the Head of Informatics will report directly to the Head of the Medical Department.

The successful candidate will have a degree in business administration (and possibly also qualifications in some other field), leadership experience and practical knowledge of complex ADP projects. He/she must be capable of conducting negociations successfully at all levels. A good command of spoken and written German and English is essential. Some basic knowledge of medicine and/or related fields would be an added advantage, but is not a prerequisite.

Applications, with details of qualifications and experience and quoting Box N° I.H.T. 647, should be addressed to Dr. W. Reber, Personnel Department, CIBA-GEIGY LIMITED, Postfach, 4002 Basel, Switzerland.

The number of such cases filed last year rose to 24, from 14 the year before, according to Nihon Keizai Shimbun, Japan's leading business newspaper. Some of the increase may represent cases that in the past would have been filed in courts but now are filed with the ITC, which acts faster Japanese companies are beginning to see such cases as a means to block their

In the United States, the number of applications filed has remained fairly steady, totaling 105,704 in 1983, down slightly from 106,932 in 1973. About 40 percent of the ap-plications in 1983 came from foreigners, 15,743 from Japan alone. Streamlining the patent process would make it easier for Americans to file for patents here.

It is difficult to document any cases of outright discrimination against foreign applicants. U.S. trade negotiators nevertheless contend that approvals of important patents are slowed down to give Japanese companies a chance to

But the Japanese say important patents are more likely to be delayed because they elicit more op-position than less important ones.

Poland and Western Banks Sign Rescheduling Accord

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches
LONDON — Poland signed Friday a rescheduling agreement with its creditor banks covering $1.6 billion of its debts. Barelays Bank International reported.

The agreement - reached in principle in Warsaw in April includes new revolving short-term trade financing of about $645 million for Poland

Signing on behalf of the Polish government was the first deputy minister of finance, W. Bien, and for Bank Handlowy, the foreign trade bank of Warsaw, its president, K. Glazewski.

Midland Seeking 100% of Crocker

SAN FRANCISCO — Mid-land Bank of London proposed Friday to increase its equity in Crocker National Bank from the current 57 percent to 100 percent in a transaction valued at $207 million. Midland acquired its Crocker stock under a 1980 agreement that forbade it from increasing its holding without the prior approval by non-Midland directors. Approval of shareholders of both Midland and Crocker also would be required.

Michael F. Julien, chief financial officer of Midland, said he did not envision the offer being treated as hostile. Crocker, the 13th largest U.S. bank, had a loss of $120.8 million in the first quarter, but intimated earlier this week that it made a profit in the second quarter.

More important to many economist is the low level of wage increases during the recovery. Wage givebacks occurred in such indusries as steel, automobiles, tires, airlines and meat-packing. The Bu-reau of Labor Statistics' employment cost index rose 9 per-1981. By the year ended September 1983, it dropped to 5 percent. Because of gains in productivity,' industry's overall labor costs have been virtually flat, according to Joel Popkin, a consultant to the

It takes a while longer for the full enormity of the directly from his Russian puppet-masters.

How about a civil war, with state National Guard Congress to go home and let him run the country? How about a cordon of troops around the Lisner Auditorium, where Congress is trying to sneak in the nation depends, between an antique Mississippi steamboat and a tugboat? Or an attempted coup d'etat by the Speaker of the House — a nasty character named Moran who might make even the most diebard Republican years for the return of Tip O'Neill? Or a shipwreck in the Pacific that threatens to contaminate a whole ocean with a super-lethal chemical weapon called "Nerve Agent S"?

How about a climactic scene in which an old lady in a wheelchair is pushed into an open elevator shaft at the top of the World Trade Center — a scene that will have the audience cheering if "Deep Six" is ever made into a movie as the author clearly hopes it will Cussler offers all this and much, much more in his latest book. If what you want is fast, mindless action, you can have your fill. What you cannot find in "Deep Six" is any kind of believability or coherence in plot and characters, or the most rudimentary sense of style in the writing. It is as though the author decided that he would incorporate certain scenes into his latest novel and then sat down to dream up, rather carelessly, a set of characters and incidents that would allow him to put in those scenes. The product of this effort does not take much time to read, but it is not worth what it takes.

Presumably, by now, there is a cult following for Dirk Pitt, the damp James Bond look-alike who specializes in underwater work and who has been the hero of more than half a dozen Cussler epics — most notably, "Raise the Titanic." At this point in Pitt's career, the problem is that he has already done, in one adventure or another, nearly all the interesting things that can be done under water. He still spends a lot of time going after sunken vessels for example, the presidential yacht, which is kidnaped.

espionage and politics where he has no expertise at all. This time around, Clive Cussler is lost at sea. He has gone out beyond his depth.

Of the six teams in the women's race, only the two French entries were familiar with the Alps, the first mountains the women have encountered since they left Paris June 30. Like the men, whom they precede by two hours each day, the women will finish June 22 on the Champs Elysées.

In the village of La Chapelle en Vercors before the race started, many of the non-French riders were apprehensive as they poured bottles of water over their heads to prepare for the hot ride.

We're not exactly intimidated," said Jolanta Goral of the United States. "At least the rest of the American team isn't, but I sort of Allen. "We're going to practice unam. I just don't know what it will be der the lights. That's what we had She finished 23d.

Sotheby's Puts Off Scheduled Sale of Guevara's Diaries

The Associated Press

T ONDON — Next week's scheduled sale of the diaries of the late Ernesio (Che) Guevara, the Argentine-born Cuban revolutionary, has been indefinitely postponed because of legal action by the Bolivian government, Sotheby's announced Thursday.

A Sotheby's spokesman said the sale was postponed so that the question of ownership could be clarified in court, which could take up to 18 months.

The Bolivian government claims it owns the diaries and that they were stolen. Guevara was executed by the Bolivian army in 1967 after failing to bring about an insurrection there.

"What are those German Shepherd dogs doing?" "They're trained to saiff out suspicious crates addressed to the Democratic Convention, just to make sure if they're accredited or

"It couldn't be Mrs. Ferraro, could it?" "No, we've eliminated her, now that Mondale has announced she would be his running mate. There would be no sense in her arriving by box since there would be no element of surprise."

"What made you people pick that particular box?"

"For one thing it wasn't marked 'FRAGILE' or THIS SIDE UP," and it wasn't insured. Then when two people from the Democratic National Committee showed up in a van to claim the crate, they didn't argue when we refused to turn it over, and just drove away. This aroused our suspicions that it was Gary Hart, because now that he is no longer a vice presidential possibility the DNC doesn't care how he shows up at the convention.

"Maybe it's Jesse Jackson?" suggested.
"We've ruled him out. He'd never arrive by crate without tipping off the media."

"Maybe it's just one of the speakers scheduled to address the convention." "Yes but why would a speaker arrive in a crate?"

"Perhaps he didn't want to come in the first place, and that was the only way to get him out here." We won't know until the court order to open the box arrives." "Is there any law about shipping someone to the Democratic convention in a crate?"

"Not if he was provided with enough food and water. Otherwise the ASPCA will bring charges." Someone handed the inspector a court order and he went towards the crate with a hammer and crowbar. He tore open a few boards and talked to the person inside. Finally he nodded his head and hammered back the boards.

"Well," I said, "Who was it?" "You're not going to believe this, but it was Jimmy Carter."

Release of the Complete Correspondence

Between Roosevelt and Churchill Reveals Wartime Strains

By Edwin McDowell New York Times Service

EW YORK - New insight Vinto serious strains that developed between Franklin D. Roosevelt and Winston Churchill, after they forged a military alliance to defeat the Axis powers, has come to light in the complete correspondence between the two

The correspondence, which Princeton University Press will publish in early October, reveals tension and even bitterness between the U.S. president and the British prime minister over such matters as independence for india, how to guarantee elections in Poland and strategy for dealing with the Soviet Union, The pic-ture contrasts sharply at times with Churchill's description, in his memoirs, of an almost uniformly warm relationship.

The nearly 2,000 telegrams, let-ters and memorandums dating from Sept. 11, 1939, to the day before Roosevelt's death on April 12, 1945, have been gleaned from the Public Record Office in London, the National Archives in Washington and the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library in Hyde Park, New York.

The forthcoming three-volume work, "Churchill & Roosevelt: The Complete Correspondence," edited by Warren F. Kimball, professor of history at the Newark College of Rutgers Universiincludes Churchill's 1,161 written messages and telegrams to Roosevelt and FDR's 788 to him over those years.

The correspondence, initiated by Roosevelt eight days after Britain and France declared war on Nazi Germany, and nine days after Churchill returned to the Brit- Roosevelt worked together, of ish Cabinet, is notable for the what was important and what personal touches and what it reveals of the prejudices of the two portrait of Churchill's own role." leaders. But its major importance is in showing the extent of the scholar and official Churchill bistrains that developed between ographer, said: "Churchill's civilization, against Germany and Nazism," Kimball writes. "Then, as the outcome of the war became certain, they tried to shape the postwar world."

Churchill, who became prime minister on May 10, 1940, originally referred to himself as the "Former Naval Person" — he was a former first lord of the admiralty, while Roosevelt had been an istant secretary of the Navy and to the president as "My dear

Roosevelt in 1942 telegraphed Churchill: "It is great fun to be in the same decade with you," and referred to him as "Former Naval Person" or "My dear Winston." By the end, however, they were addressing one another as "the President" and "the Prime Minis-

"Everything else written about that relationship left out impor-tant details, because not all the information was available until now," said Forrest Pogue, direc-tor of the Dwight D. Eisenhower Institute for Historical Research at the National Museum of American History in Washington.

Churchill's postwar memoirs, "The Second World War" describe the relationship in warm terms. The prime minister even wrote to President Dwight D. Eisenhower in 1953 to assure him that he had taken pains that the sixth and final volume, "Triumph and Tragedy," contained nothing to "impair the sympathy and understanding which exist between our two countries."

According to George C. Her-ring, a professor of history at the University of Kentucky, however, "Those memoirs gave a skewer impression of how Churchill and Martin Gilbert, the Oxford

The two leaders met niné times, not without friction. Churchill was vexed by Roosevelt's threat to cut off lend-lease aid unless Britain agreed to an acceptable civil aviation treaty to be put into effect after the war.

American demand that civil airliners compete for postwar traffic in a free market, while the British, hoping to retain their share of the market, advocated pooling arrangements that would guarantee commercial carriers a portion of the business.

The following day a draft re-sponse for Churchill was pre-pared in Britain, subject to Churchill's approval, saying, "I cannot feel that the common cause would benefit by emphasizing the serious differences which would emerge between our two countries if it were known that against our own convictions we were conforming to United States public opinion in a matter which con-cerns the British Empire and is vital to our successful conduct of ventures have dazzled the world with success," he wrote on June 30, 1944

The redrafted letter, sent a day later, was couched in language considerably more conciliatory. "However we may differ on the conduct of the war," it said, "my personal gratitude to you for your kindness to me and for all you have done for the cause of freedom will never be diminished."

The two men also differed over Roosevelt's desire to oust the British-sponsored king of Greece and hold free elections.

But perhaps the major irritant was Roosevelt's tendency to treat the British as a junior partner. One example was his proposal for a private meeting with Stalin, in the belief that the Soviet leader would be more frank in discussing the Balkans, Finland and Poland without Churchill around.

"Roosevelt never held his pri-vate talks with Stalin, but the tone of the documents makes it clear that by late 1943 things were different between Churchill and Roosevelt," Kimball writes. Churchill and Great Britain. took the role of junior partner in the Anglo-American alliance."
Kimball said in a telephone interview that while the correspondence shows that Churchill recog-nized the beginnings of the Cold War earlier than Roosevelt did, "his bragging about how he saw it coming during World War II is just not true."

By contrast, the correspondence reveals that Roosevelt was less concerned about postwar Russia than about postwar France and the reconstitution of the Polish government. Both men, for example, were annoyed by what they regarded as the haughtiness of Charles de Gaulle, the leader of the Free French, about whom Roosevelt — in commenting on the 1943 Casablanca Conference — said The day he arrived, he thought he was Joan of Arc and the following day he insisted that he was Georges Clémenceau." Moreover, Roosevelt thought that postwar France would be convulsed by political chaos and virtually ungovernable as a result.

For all their differences, the United States and Britain remained remarkably close allies. "But stripped of romanticized myth," Kimball writes, "that relationship was made of mutual selfinterest, the same stuff as other

They left Tenerife in the Canary Islands on May 22. aboard their 15-meter (48-foot) raft Atlantis, built to an Inca design from nine balsa wood trunks and steered with six adjustable boards instead of a rudder. . . . Princess Anne unveiled a plaque Friday honoring the first English colony in America. The marker commemorating the 400th anniversary of Sir Walter Raleigh's colonies tells the story: "From Plymouth, England, on 27 April 1584, Walter Raleigh sent Philip Amadas and Arthur Barlowe to North America to explore and prepare for English colonization. On 13 July they claimed land in the name of Queen Elizabeth. Called Virginia in her honor, this area is now known as North Carolina. In 1585, a colony under Gov. Ralph Lane settled here on Roa-noke Island, remaining a year. In 1587, a second colony under Gov. John White established the cittie of Raleigh' at the same site. This settlement, known as Raleigh's lost colony, disappeared between 1587 and 1590."

A team of U.S. bridge players in Washington headed by Supreme Court Justice John Paul Stevens was beaten by a visiting team consisting of British members of Parliament, but the loss won them a trip to England. In a full day and night of hand-to-hand combat, the British won most of the hands. But a sponsor of the charity event, had agreed to fly the losers to the homeland of the winners for a rematch.
